dorsed at home.

Proof of merit in a Hopkinsville
woman's statement.

Mrs. James Moore, 612 Jessup Ave., Hopkinsville, says: "My kidneys were weak and I was greatly bothered on that account. I felt dull and had dizzy spells. I finally used Doan's Kidney Pills as directed and they relieved all symptoms of kidney and bladder trouble. I surely can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get

Anti T. B. Campaign.

New York, February 8.—From one to three per cent of the men being examined in the different training camps of new army and by the exemption boards are being dismissed or rejected on account of tuberculosis, according to estimates of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. At the lowest precentage this would mean 100,000 tu-berculous men in the first 10,000,000 classified for service. To secure a wider support by prominent physicians and public-spirited laymen for its new work in helping to check the spread of this and other diseases in the United States army and navy, and the consequent increased infection of the civil life, particularly children, by cases sent back to civil life, the National Association will begin today a thirty-day campaign for 5,000
new members.

President Wilson has officially recognized the important part played by the association at the present time.

A Man Among Men.

The death of John W. Huntsman, at his home at Scottsville last week,
after sixteen years of helpless, bedridden illness, removed from this section of the State a character at once strong and remarkable.

A giant in physical manhood, he was tenacious in his dealings with the weak; rough in speech and ready always for trouble, he was as quick to forgive, and no man ever applied in vain to him for help or assistance. He was a product of a generation that is fast passing, and his like will in all human probability never again mark the earth.

In all the essential elements of honesty, manhood, character, bravery and gentleness, John Huntsman was a man among men and the soil of his county was never opened to receive more manly clay.

In peace may the God of our fathers rest his soul.—Franklin Favorite.

Department Of Public Roads.

Help the boys in the trenches by building roads so that the produce of the farm can be hauled to market to feed them.

Are you proud of your country with no roads?

Mr. Officials, if you build good roads you will please your constituents—act now.

Remember that the first road built is not the last one to be built.

You know the conditions of the roads. What are you doing to better things?

You are responsible for the condition of the roads because you don't pay sufficient road taxes to build good roads.

The Kiss

By EVELYN MAY

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

If her husband had struck her in the face Margaret Blake could not have been more startled, amazed and spellbound. For a moment she fairly crumbled back. Then it seemed as if a sudden glory pervaded the little narrow hallway. For the first time in thirty years John Blake had kissed her.

"Oh, John!" she fluttered and the faded cheeks, yet soft as velvet, flushed pink and the lips quivered, and she felt as if she could die content, and then she seemed to grope her way blindly into the little parlor and sank to her knees, collapsing beside a chair and burst into tears.

"What a fuss a woman makes," she caught the tones of her husband outside, and then, soft and tenderlike—"All the same, Margaret, you're the best wife a man ever had. Hello! I forgot my cane."

He turned back into the hall and secured the article required. For a moment he halted. His glance was fixed upon the half-prostrate woman. Her hands were clasped above her head, the tears were raining down her cheeks, her soul seemed soaring heavenwards as she uttered the words:

"It is worth all the longing and waiting of thirty years—oh! my one only love. Oh! life is sweet."

"I'm!" John Blake tried to mutter in his practical phlegmatic way, but the strong man was shaken. It was the first day in two weeks that John had been out of the house. He had recently overdone himself, was laid up with a bad attack of rheumatism and Margaret had nursed him.

A sense of her tireless attention, sleepless nights, poignant anxieties had overcome him as he left the house. A flash of the true worth of this deserving woman had caused that erratic impulse of sentiment.

How glorious it was to again bathe in the joyous sunlight, free from pain! How neat and prosperous the farm looked. Margaret had done double service as nurse, housekeeper and out-door manager.

Margaret won a furtive, but half-gratified glance from John as he noted at supper time that she wore one of the tidy white aprons, that had seemed so dainty and becoming in the earlier days of their married career.

"You mustn't overdo yourself, John, remember," she said the next morning, and accompanied him again to the door. There was something longing and wistful in her eyes.

"You aren't thinking of yesterday's nonsense, are you, Margaret?" he half-laughed.

"Yesterday's nonsense kept me happy all day long, John," she said, her lips trembling.

"It's cheap and handy, anyway," said he, and went over and gave her a hearty smack.

"How, how!" greeted John outside, in the yard, in his gig, was his portly neighbor Joshua Griggs. He waved his whip cheerfully.

"I say Blake," he hailed, "what's the occasion? Old sparking days over again?"

John was deeply chagrined. A frown came to his face.

"No harm done, is there?" he challenged angrily.

"What's the good, though? Why, I haven't kissed my wife in ten years. That soon wears out with the sex, Blake. Women get a man and forget everything except that he is a provider. Your wife drudges, mine galls—change, change, change. Never satisfied. Bah! the honeymoon over and they're practical critters."

"Perhaps if you kissed your wife once in a while she would drop so much gallivanting."

"Don't you criticize my wife!" blurted Griggs.

"I ain't. You did. Yes, I've made Margaret a drudge."

"And she's happy in it. Don't disturb her way."

"But I'm going to mend things, Joshua. I'm beginning to wonder if the humdrum way we sink into mere providers doesn't chill all that is lovely and natural in women folks."

"Margaret," said John the next day, "you're going to make a two-weeks' visit to your sister and her two little kids. You're going to bring them back here, for good. Miranda is having a hard time of it, and I see my duty plain to make it easier for the poor widow. With her help you won't be trading your life out."

"Oh, John! the added burden for you, their care."

"A blessing, girl," declared John. "Those two little ones will make music in the house. There's going to be a change in affairs around here—phonograph, movies, new furniture, maybe an automobile. You're going to get something out of life, if it takes all I've got. Good-by. Two weeks, take a good rest and come back ready to enjoy the new life," was what John said when the next day Margaret was seated in the wagon bound for the depot.

He waved his hand airily. Margaret with beaming eyes leaned forward toward him. How enticing, how girlish, she looked!

"You've forgotten something," she whispered palpitantly.

"Oh, yes!" he laughed, and merrily and with sparkling eyes, and a ready vim—"The kiss. There's two of them, Margaret. Heaven bless you!"

STUDYING FOOD IN ENGLAND

An American special mission is now in Great Britain studying the food situation there at first hand for Herbert Hoover, the federal food administrator.
